Frames of meaning and categorization can organize our engagements in the world. These frameworks include ideologies, culture, theories of therapy, gender, communities, etc. These frame how we relate, the rules of what we say, how we say it, the choreography of contexts, and the relational aspect between people and the environment.

Drawing on recursive frame analysis (RFA), relational play, an improv mindset, and relational meditation, we will explore how engagements often exist in language, interaction, and co-meaning-making. In this interactive space, we will explore how to enter frameworks of meaning in a playful manner.

The webinar will be 75 minutes.
